

Unnatural Selection

In the same way that early man selected the companion animals that increased its' chances for survival, the modern corporate animal selects employees that increase its' chances for profit, growth and expansion.

In the same way that an overly aggressive pet would be put down and left to the predators, an overly costly human will be put down and left to the creditors.

Over time this will soften the spirit of the surviving animals and allow it to reside peacefully under the thumb of its' master.
